MANY of us have heard of wraps or bodysuits that promise to help us lose the kilos or sculpt a firmer figure. But how many can attest to a bodysuit that actually reduces the appearance of cellulite on the skin?

A special form of fabric from an Italian company has claimed to be able to do just that, as well as help people lose a few centimetres at a time. Called TexenergyCell, the patented fabric is made of elements of copper, zinc and silicon, interwoven with soft micro-fibre.

The reaction of the three materials produces an imperceptible current that helps to stimulate the draining of fat in adipose tissue. It does this by stimulating circulation throughout the veins. Skin becomes smoother and appears to have minimal imperfections. This way, it helps reduce the appearance of cellulite.

This process is referred to as metal therapy, which is an ancient science that uses metals to cure various illnesses. Scientists believe all living things are surrounded by magnetic fields, which can be affected in different ways by certain metals.

TexenergyCell explores the therapeutic properties of copper, zinc and magnesium, helping release enough beneficial energy to help improve circulation.

The bodysuits come in many varieties – high waist, regular waist, shorts and leggings. They are also easy to wear, as the external parts are made from transpiring micro-fibre. With regular wear, visible results can be seen in up to 10 days. By continuously wearing them, the results can be maintained for long periods.

The suits can also be worn underneath regular clothing during the day, although for optimal results, they should be worn at night before bed.

To help keep the fabric in its natural state, a special bag is provided to help safeguard the material when it is being machine washed.

The company has also produced another range of attire with a different metal composition to aid in pain relief. These can be used to treat various sports injuries, aches and sprains. Called TexenergyDol, they are a series of unisex garments in the form of shorts, lumbar belts, wrist, elbow, knee and ankle bands and muscle warmers, among others.
